Armed Services Day

Saturday, May 19, is Armed Services Day. We should observe it properly.

In many cities and towns across the country, programs will include speeches, parades and other ceremonies. Altogether, there will be a general expression of public appreciation for the loyalty of our soldiers, sailors, marines and airmen.

We hope that the programs will not be perfunctory, that parades will not constitute the only accomplishments of the day. In the hearts and minds of all citizens should arise an acknowledgement of the debt we owe service men today and in the past, the confident prayer that, in case of peril in the future, other brave and courageous men and women will carry on to preserve our freedom.

On this day we should especially remember the men who gave their lives for our country. We should not overlook the wounded and disabled who will, in many cases, not be present in the parades. Let us also interest ourselves in the welfare of the wounded and in surviving orphans of soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice.

The Pastor Speaks

This is the third in a series of articles on the Christian home as a witness for Christ.

In Acts 1:8 Christ said, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth." If within our homes Christ's teachings and love are exercised and used, our homes will be blessed as well as those guests who come there. If every home had a time during the day when God's Word was read and daily prayer was a part, our communities and world would begin to experience the abundant life Christ wants us to have.

Parents have a special privilege and responsibility to lead their children to a personal faith in Christ as Savior and Lord, and in helping them to find a place of growth and service in the church. Too many parents neglect this responsibility and leave it to the pastor or Sunday School teacher when the joy should be theirs.

We have a responsibility to the unsaved and unchurched members of our family and to other loved ones in their own homes. Always our witness of prayer and concern should be coupled with patience and genuine Christian love. We must never force our witness on anyone. Let God through His Spirit do the convicting. Christ only asks us to be faithful not successful.

Prayer: Lord, may every home in Appomattox exemplify Christ and His teachings. In Christ's Name. Amen.

The Sunday School Lesson

HERBERT C. BRADSHAW

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for May 20, 1973.

Topic: God's Grace Sustains Us
Scripture: Isaiah 40: 25-31; 2 Cor. 4:15; 12:9-10; Phil. 4:10-13

"My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness." 2 Cor. 12:9

Grace, in its theological usage, is frequently defined as the favor of God freely given to men who do not merit or deserve it. In the light of this definition, the distinction is sometimes made that people are saved by the grace of God, that they live in his mercy. Grace includes, too, as the Scriptural passage which provides the theme of this week's International Sunday School lesson shows, God's gift of strength and power to sustain the saint and to enable them to do the hard, sometimes seemingly impossible, work which is disproportionate to human strength but necessary for the advancement of the kingdom of God or the improvement of the human condition.

Writing to the Christians in Corinth, Paul referred to his own weakness as contrasting with the divine visions and revelations he had experienced. He had a particular weakness, which he termed "a thorn in the flesh," no doubt to indicate its painful and harassing nature. He prayed God for its removal, but instead of removal he received the answer, 'My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness." So Paul accepted this "thorn in the flesh," that God's power might be the more effectively demonstrated in him and as a deterrent to any pride he might develop because God had favored him with visions and revelations of divine truth.

Commenting on Archibald Alexander's observations (in THE LOG COLLEGE) on the deadening effect of dogma unrelieved by Christian charity, John A. Mackay concluded that it takes "very special grace to be a theologian." Paul's acceptance of his "thorn in the flesh" shows what he means. Insight into divine truths can make a person proud, although pride is properly listed among the deadly sins. The self has a way of abusing and misusing even divine gifts; the example of ancient Israel as the chosen people shows how the favor of God can be made the basis of an ungodly pride.

God's grace is not limited to theologiens in its bestowal, however. Happily it is available to all who come to Him in trust and commitment. As in the case of Paul, it means the difference between achievement and failure. Nor is Paul the only example of the individual who has refused to allow some weakness or illness or handicap to prevent him from leading a constructive, productive, triumphant life. Many have done so, and their achievements are testimony to God's grace.

Man works most effectively when he draws on God's strength and power. When he does so, he demonstrates realization of his own weaknesses and imperfections and his need of a greater power than his own on which to depend. Thereby he reduces the factor of the self and pride in his own strength and ability to perform, a condition in which his attention would be focused on himself rather than on the work to be done. The person who depends upon God for strength allows God to work through him and becomes truly God's agent in human affairs.

God's grace and power are adequate for all human needs; graciously, that is, through the merit of the individual, saved, as he needs. In this sense a person can persevere in the face of tacles and disappoints. This is the faith which mountains as people work vance the kingdom of God promote human betterm
